Microsoft + Huntress: A Look at the ROI

Adding Huntress to your Microsoft Business Premium setup helps consolidate your security stack, save on costs, and reduce management headaches—all backed by a 24/7 human-led, AI-assisted SOC.

Here's a look at the ROI.

1. Licensing Cost Savings

Managing multiple, disconnected tools isn't just time-consuming—it adds up quickly. By bringing together Microsoft Business Premium and Huntress, you can cover areas like:

- Identity Protection & Access Management
- Endpoint Protection
- Email, Communication & Collaboration
- File Sharing & Storage
- Endpoint & Mobile Device Management
- Storage
- Labeling & Encryption

All told, separate solutions for these areas can add up to $91 per user/month. Using Microsoft and Huntress to cover these areas is about $30 per user/month.

That's a 67% reduction in licensing costs, or $61 savings per user/month.

> "We've used Huntress for a couple of years now. Initially as a sort-of backup 'insurance policy' in case anything got past our existing Webroot AV, but now we've ditched Webroot altogether and use Defender + Huntress EDR as a more cost-effective and better performing package."

2. TCO: Operational Efficiency and Risk Reduction

The right tools aren't just about price—they're about making your team's job easier and more effective. Together, Microsoft and Huntress deliver measurable results which lower TCO:

- 35% lower likelihood of data breaches thanks to integrated access controls, logs, and MFA
- 75% faster endpoint configuration with Windows Autopilot
- 25% decrease in software deployment time using Microsoft Entra ID and Intune
- 15% reduction in help desk tickets via self-service password resets
- 60 hours boost in user productivity with Microsoft 365 collaborative tools
- 23% cut in employee device spending with secure BYOD through Intune

These advantages add up to $18.35 per user/month in additional operational savings.

Your Tech Stack: Simpler, Stronger, and More Cost-Effective

Combining Huntress with Microsoft Business Premium simplifies your tech stack and strengthens your security posture, while reducing both licensing and operational expenses. For teams looking for efficient, scalable protection without unnecessary overhead, using Microsoft and Huntress together is a straightforward way to get there.
